

FOREWORD

This booklet is issued by Iowa-Illinois Gas and Electric Company for the purpose of informing customers, architects, engineers, contractors, inspectors, and other interested parties of the rules and regulations governing the utilization of gas service provided by the Company. It is intended as a convenient reference guide for the installation and use of gas equipment.

It is the desire of the Company to achieve for each customer, by enforcement of these rules and regulations, the greatest practical latitude in the use of gas service. The standards prescribed herein are required to safeguard the customer and to insure reliability of service.

These rules and regulations are supplementary to and do not intentionally conflict with the American National Standards Institute and such state and municipal standards as may be in force within the territory in which the Company furnishes gas service. Local municipal ordinances should always be adhered to as the information herein may not include all municipal regulations.

The rules and regulations contained herein may not necessarily cover every condition or situation which may arise. In such event, the customer or his agent should contact the Company to determine the applicable requirements.

These rules and regulations are applicable to all service agreements and contracts entered into by the Company, unless otherwise provided in such agreements, and to all gas rate schedules in effect from time to time. A schedule of rates, including terms and conditions, is available for inspection at all Company offices. Compliance with the provisions of the schedule of rates is necessary in addition to the rules and regulations contained herein.

No agent or employee of the Company shall have the authority to modify, amend, or suspend the rules and regulations as stated herein. The Company may, from time to time, amend and add to these rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary and as approved by the regulatory authorities.
